NEWSLETTER JULY TO SEPTEMBER - 2026

Editorial Note :

Holding On to Hope, Building for Tomorrow

The world is witnessing a particularly difficult period. Everywhere we look, we see unhappiness, tension, worry and uncertainty. The overall picture can sometimes seem quite gloomy.

Against this backdrop, one of the best things that happened to us during this period was the Gokulashtami series and the annual event supporting Unnati's causes. I believe those 23 days had a wonderful effect on all of us. Each day, a great performance seemed to recharge our energies, bring us happiness and remind us that the world is, after all, not such a bad place to live in.

I take this opportunity to thank all the artistes who gave their very best, the donors who made the celebrations possible, and the rasikas who came together to celebrate and participate. These celebrations help us connect with so many like-minded people and strengthen our relationship with the community. They are also a powerful way of showcasing the work of Unnati and creating ambassadors for our cause.

A big thank you from all of us at Unnati.

This is indeed one of those tough years when even survival is becoming difficult. The situation across industries, companies and individuals is challenging, and for an NGO, which depends on the support of these very stakeholders, the challenges are naturally even greater.

We at Unnati are also facing the heat. In order to remain sustainable and ensure that we continue to do our best, we have consciously scaled down our operations this year. Our endeavour will be to do the best we can with what we have and, most importantly, ensure that the impact of our work remains high.

As an organisation, we have been working extensively on our models to make them as replicable and scalable as possible. We are developing approaches that can lend themselves to outcome-based funding and encourage greater government participation when results are proven. We are also looking at creating impact at a large scale with relatively small amounts of funding, using technology and methods where participation from the larger ecosystem can make a significant difference.

We hope these efforts will get noticed by larger institutions and groups and enable us to take our work to scale. The youth of our country need these interventions, and we believe Unnati has the experience, the models and the commitment to make a meaningful difference.

Finally, I would urge all our patrons to truly own Unnati.

We are creating impact at the ground level. We are transparent and committed to high standards of governance. But an organisation like ours can grow only when our stakeholders feel that Unnati is their organisation too.

When you begin to treat an organisation as your own, you naturally find the right nuances to speak about it, introduce it to others and build support around it. That is how an organisation such as ours can grow.

We are an NGO. We cannot grow through inorganic expansion or by simply chasing size. Our growth has to be organic, built patiently through the support, trust and participation of all our stakeholders.

And that is what we hope to continue doing— creating meaningful impact, one stakeholder at a time.
